

Ngozi Edi-Osagie is a consultant neonatologist and is one of the Group Associate Medical Directors at Manchester foundation trust. She has broad clinical and leadership experience, having been a clinical lead, a clinical director, and a Clinical head of division of clinical services. She was clinical lead for the development of a single hospital service across the city of Manchester overseeing the merge of 10 hospitals and community services into a single trust. She is the neonatal representative on the NHS Race and Health Observatory and is the medical advisor for the Carribean and African Health Network which is a Manchester based voluntary organisation. She is officer for Genomics at Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health and is the National Clinical Director for Neonatal Critical care.