

Amy Cyriac

I am a medical student at the University of Manchester with a growing passion for Paediatrics. My interest began while working as an HCA in the neonatal and paediatric wards, where I gained first-hand experience caring for children and their families. I am also an active member of the UoM BAME Society, which helps promote awareness and education around diversity within medicine. I am looking forward to deepening my knowledge in Paediatrics through council events and connecting with like-minded students and clinicians.
