

Charlotte Nixon

After finishing medical school in Newcastle in 2021 I moved to Manchester to begin my foundation training. Having worked my way through several specialities, I realised that while I enjoyed caring for patients on the wards, I was more interested in the underlying pathophysiology of their disease, and this was cemented for me through attending various conferences, RC Path and MMS events; I have decided to pursue histopathology as a career and I am working towards a training number.

Currently I am working as a Research Fellow at the Christie hospital with the Experimental Cancer Medicine Team and the Urology Research Team, I work as a Sub-Investigator across a large portfolio of clinical trials and help to run early phase trials for patients with a variety of solid organ tumours.

Outside of work I enjoy reading and I am trying (and for the most part failing) to learn how to crochet.